The flow of the kitchen in this 1950's ranch home needed help! Our talented designers at Acheson Builders were able to solve this need with simple, creative, and beautiful style.

The home, having been previously added onto in the 70's (by others), retained the kitchen in its original location with a reduced size; a wall built near one end created a side room, but cramped the kitchen.

50 years later, in 2024, the homeowner decided that her kitchen needed change. She wanted to provide a more pleasant, open space to allow for interaction with her grown children, their families, and friends.

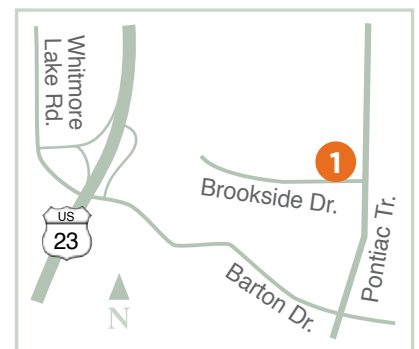

We enlarged the window over the sink and removed a kitchen wall to create a lovely breakfast area with better views and access to the back gardens. By removing more walls and adding an island, traffic flow was dramatically improved, allowing better socialization, and lovely views to the front gardens.

New cabinets, quartz countertops, wood floors, and calming colors all generated a tasteful, refined and open space, plus a happy homeowner!
